2. Luberef has advantaged value chain positions due to long term access to high quality, low value reduced crude oil feedstock, operational cost leadership, strategically located production assets, and long-standing relationships with key customers:

- Luberef has advantaged value chain positions in feedstock supply, assets and operations, and customer relationships.
- Luberef believes that the high quality, low value reduced crude oil feedstock, which is the main feedstock used by the Company, has an optimal composition for use in producing base oils, and its market price is typically lower per barrel than Brent due to its high sulfur content⁸.
- The Company believes that its advantaged feedstock position and reliability of supply enable high plant utilization (87% in 2021G) for base oil production, resulting in high operational efficiency, supply and resilience.
- The Company's base oil unit production cost, excluding feedstock, was approximately USD 119 per MT in 2021G, over 60% lower than the average for other base oil producers⁹ due to its asset quality and scale, energy efficiency, and high utilization from secured feedstock.
- The Company believes that its deep, multi-decade relationships with globally and regionally renowned base oil customers, is due to the reliability and quality of its base oil supply.

3. Luberef has a track record of value-added growth with attractive opportunities to capture projected market growth in key end-markets:

- Luberef has grown its base oil production capacity and sales volumes, with the most recent Yanbu Growth I expansion project, allowing the Company to introduce Group II base oil production capacity into Saudi Arabia to cater for domestic and regional demand.

- The demand outlook for base oils is further supported by strong macro fundamentals in Saudi Arabia and the broader Middle East region, which are key end-markets for Luberef, with real GDP expected to grow at a Compounded Annual Growth Rate (CAGR) of approximately 2.5% in Saudi Arabia and approximately 3.3%, in the Middle East between 2021G and 2030G¹⁰.

- The Company achieved a base oil crack margin of USD 599 per MT in FY 2021G.
- The Company's strong financial performance in FY 2021G is attributed to an increase in Group II base oils sales volumes following full ramp up of its Yanbu Growth I expansion project in 2021G, in addition to high demand that was met with tight supply in the base oil market due to lack of feedstock from refinery operations of some base oil producers.
- The Company operates within a robust financial framework that focuses on three key elements, including capital structure, capital investments and shareholders returns.
- The Company targets a prudent capital structure and strong liquidity position, with a target gearing ratio of 25-35% through the cycle and gearing of 15% as at 31 December 2021G.
- The Company's operational setup requires low maintenance capex given its well invested asset base, preventative maintenance programs, recently completed and ramped up expansions, and a rigorous capital allocation process for growth projects, all of which underpin a robust financial profile the Company believes is beneficial to ROACE.
