Purchase, Sale, and Pledge of the Company's Shares

1. The company may purchase its ordinary, preferred, or redeemable shares, pledge them, or sell them in accordance with the regulations set by the competent authority. Shares purchased by the company shall carry no voting rights at the shareholders' meetings.
2. The company may purchase its shares to hold as treasury shares for the following purposes:
 - Allocating them to employees under the company's employee share program and in accordance with the regulations issued by the competent authority.
 - If the Board of Directors, or its authorized delegate, deems that the market price of the share is below its fair value.
 - To fulfill the rights of holders of convertible debt instruments or financial bonds that can be converted into shares, in accordance with the terms of those debt instruments or bonds.
 - In exchange for the acquisition of shares or equity interests in a company, or for the purchase of an asset.
3. The company may sell treasury shares in one or multiple phases in accordance with the regulations set by the competent authority.
4. The company may pledge its shares in accordance with the regulations set by the competent authority. The pledgee shall have the right to receive dividends and exercise the rights attached to the pledged shares unless otherwise agreed in the pledge agreement. The pledgee shall not be entitled to attend or vote at the general or special shareholders' meetings.
